7. The present study cannot achieve representativeness for the following reasons: non-responders are not included; the data are not subject to a likelihood ratio test and two pairs of genes are not included (see Table 1); if small number n , namely, that there should be equal to 10, then there are many genes which cannot be observed and cannot be included in the data before the n genes are fully observed and then it is expected that the comparison results are not very accurate. See ref. [12].
